

Foodlogik SmartVan

The new SmartVan van sales module was entirely conceived by our Development team with a lot of feedback and pilot running from Express Bakery of Dumfries. The fact that Express are now live and would never go back to paperwork is testament to how squarely we hit the nail on the head.

As Director Malcolm Johnstone says, "This is exactly what I was hoping for all these years! Too many systems out there concentrate at great expense on on-line synchronisation between the van and the central database while the driver does his round. We aren't TNT - we only need to know at the start of the round and at the end. During the round the system gives the driver the ability to change or add new orders, to know the up to date prices and what stock there is so he has maximum flexibility".

The advent of Android smart phones and tablets now makes this much more viable at a realistic cost to the average baker, dairy or anyone that does delivery rounds.

The key features are:

- Download delivery round details, van stocks and product prices on a daily basis
- Scrolling list of orders in delivery sequence
- Change or add new items to an order, or do a new order e.g. cash sales
- Display stock remaining at any time
- Record cash or cheque payments
- Display and print outstanding invoices— a "mini-statement"
- Email delivery notes or invoice from the Tablet
- Print invoice in the van using a mobile printer
- Update FoodLogiK with delivery adjustments and cash taken at the end of the round
- Simple, intuitive handheld design which requires minimal training for the driver

A Part of Affinitus Group AFFINITUS

Printers and Samsung Galaxy Tab2 units being re-charged in the office at Express Bakery

Each unit lasts more than two days before needing to be re-charged, so there is no need to keep them plugged in while in the van.

What does this mean for Express Bakery? As Malcolm says, "We've been catapulted into the 21st century. No more delivery notes means far fewer mistakes and the drivers prefer this because they really hate paperwork - the customers know exactly what they got, and how much they paid. Invoices are now being paid on time in full with fewer disputes and this leaves our admin staff and management more time to push the business forward, not just keep the wheels turning."
